"Tulip Grove, located on the land lying directly across the highway from the Hermitage, has its chief claim to distinction in the fact that it was built by General Andrew Jackson for his adopted son and private secretary, Andrew Jackson Donelson. He was a nephew of General Jackson's wife.

"After the death of Andrew Jackson, the master of Tulip Grove, Major Andrew Jackson Donelson, became a statesman and a figure of national importance in his own right, being first charge d'affaires to the republic of Texas, later Minister to Prussia, and a candidate for Vice-President on the ticket with Fillmore. After his death Tulip Grove passed out of the Donelson family." (History of Homes and Gardens of Tenn., Garden Study Club of Nashville)^{p. 159} - From data prepared by Charles E. Peterson, August 1940.
